Areas of Interest in Research and Teaching

French and Spanish Linguistics, (Referential) Semantics, Pragmatics, Text Linguistics, Contrastive Linguistics, Special Languages (particularly business language), Error Analysis, Language Teaching and Learning, Intercultural Communication, "Francophonie", Sociolinguistics (Code choice and Language Needs), Language and Food, Language and Sports.

Professor Eva Lavric has her research roots in Referential Semantics and Contrastive Linguistics (Romance Languages versus German), which includes her doctoral thesis and her habilitation (post-doc publication to obtain a professorship). Within this field, her research is very strongly empirically orientated (multilingual corpus) and continually includes pragmatic aspects (misunderstandings). Besides, she has published in the domains of special languages, language needs analyses and language learning and teaching in connection with her work at the Vienna University of Economics and Business Administration. Furthermore, her teaching focuses on all aspects of "francophonie", whether linguistic or political / economic.

After the habilitation, Professor Lavric extended her research interests among others in the direction of intercultural communication/intercultural misunderstandings, and particularly in the areas of code choice and code switching in professional contexts. She has also expanded her competence in various areas of pragmatics (Code choice and face, Referring in interaction, Vague quantification). In the context of the two faculty research areas "Cultures in contact" and "Multilingualism" she initiated the projects "Cultures and Culinaria" and "Communication in football".
