Jannis Nolte (University of Hildesheim)

Jannis Nolte is currently in his fourth semester studying Digital Social Sciences at the University of Hildesheim. His academic focus lies in the intersection of digital data analysis and social sciences, with a particular interest in the impact of digital media on societal structures. Jannis is actively involved in a peer credit project, contributing to collaborative learning initiatives. His background in political science subtly informs his approach to linguistic studies, enriching his perspective on the interdisciplinary aspects of language and society.
